

Vasquez Runs for NY 21st Congressional District

March 21st, 2008 (Guilderland) - Steven Vasquez, a Tech Valley entrepreneur, announced his bid as a Republican for the 21st Congressional District on the first day of Spring. Steven is running to stop wasting money so we can protect seniors and veterans.

“We need to focus on fixing our fiscal house and taking care of Social Security. With the economy in a recession, the dollar falling, rising gas and food prices, the mortgage crisis, and massive deficit spending, Washington has the wrong priorities.”

As baby boomers enter retirement age in the next 20 years, the US General Accountability Office (GAO) says the federal government will go broke leaving taxpayers holding the bill for over $500,000 per household. Steven says, “this is the greatest threat to national security, as the government will not be able to pay for national defense or its commitments to our senior citizens and veterans.”

Unlike current politicians with ties to special interest groups, Steven stated he will fight for Americans and make the hard choices to stop Congress from deficit spending that robs from Social Security and endangers national security.

A native of New York State, Steven is a proud member of the Capital District’s Tech Valley. A Lally School MBA and an RPI engineer, Steven invented the first MP3 media server in 1997, five years before Apple introduced the iPod. Steven created manufacturing and engineering jobs in Tech Valley by co-founding ReQuest, a successful consumer electronics business. More information on Steven Vasquez’s campaign can be found on his website, www.steven2008.com.

#

For interviews call, Warren Redlich at 518-225-3710